

Nadia Alam

Institutional Researcher, St. Mark's School, Southborough, MA

Nadia is the Institutional Researcher at St. Mark's School in Southborough, Massachusetts. In this role, she directs the institution in data collection and analysis to inform strategic decision making and the assessment of key initiatives, such as the STEM Initiative and Global Citizenship Initiative. Nadia previously served as Project Director in the Office of the President at Fisher College and prior to that was Associate Director of Research & Special Projects at the New England Association of Schools & Colleges (NEASC). Nadia has taught workplace ESL in Massachusetts and spent one year as an English Language Teacher in Shimotsuma, Japan as a fellow of the Japan Exchange & Teaching Program. She has been involved in various volunteer causes, such as serving as a member of the Board of Advisors for Axis of Hope, a nonprofit dedicated to teaching students non-violent conflict resolution skills, as Boston's Chapter Head for Youth Outreach Developments in Literacy, a volunteer-run group which raises money for girls' schools in Pakistan, and as a Group Writing Coach for the Posse Foundation, an organization that identifies and recruits public high school students who have exceptional academic and leadership potential but who may be overlooked by the traditional college application process. Nadia is passionate about diversity initiatives in education institutions and is working toward her Certificate in Diversity & Inclusion Management from Cornell University. Nadia has a B.A. in Sociology from McGill University in Montreal, Canada and a M. Ed. in International Education Policy from the Harvard Graduate School of Education in Cambridge, Massachusetts.
