

Kristy Huntley

Kristy Huntley is the Director of Academic Assessment at the University of New Haven in Connecticut. She works with faculty and administration coordinating the University-wide assessment plan, facilitating several professional development workshops each year to assist faculty with student learning assessment. In addition, Dr. Huntley remains in the classroom, as teaching is her passion. Over the last 13 years she has instructed students enrolled in a variety of psychology courses. She loves teaching Introduction to Psychology, commonly taken by freshmen, which allows her to mentor and support new students. Her research interests include: positive transitions to college; bullying in adolescents; and peer relationships in adolescence. Dr. Huntley earned her undergraduate degree in psychology from the University of Connecticut, Master of Arts degree from Southern Connecticut State University, and ultimately earned her Ph.D. in Educational Psychology from Capella University. Outside of academia, Dr. Huntley enjoys time with her husband and two children, Ava (12) and Noah (10), whom enjoy referring to her as dance mom and basketball mom!
