

Richard Reeves

Richard Reeves is the Chief of the Postsecondary Branch within the Administrative Data Division. In this role, Rich leads and directs activities related to IPEDS and other topics related to postsecondary education. Rich has two decades of experience conducting research in postsecondary education and has worked at the National Student Clearinghouse as its inaugural Director of Research, at Cornell University as a Senior Researcher, and Johns Hopkins University as the Director of Enrollment Research and Technology. Most recently, Rich served as a team lead for the U.S. Energy Information Administration (EIA) where he led a team dedicated to the development and implementation of energy surveys. He has earned a B.A. in Psychology from Frostburg State University, a M.A. in Experimental Psychology from Towson University, a M.S. in Statistics from Cornell University, and is currently studying Organizational Leadership at Shenandoah University.